A PROUD HISTORY

In New England's Gun Valley, gun making is a tradition that stretches back for generations.

In 1964 a new tradition was born, when a young gun designer named Douglas McClennahan founded Charter Arms. McClennahan, who had previously worked for Colt, High Standard, and Sturm Ruger, had a vision: to produce a high-quality, reliable handgun that was also highly affordable.

He realized his vision with the introduction of his first offering: a .38 special, five-shot revolver called "The Undercover." At just 16 ounces, the new gun was the smallest, lightest steel-framed revolver in the world with the fewest moving parts. A unique hammer block system gave gun owners unparalleled protection against accidental discharge.

The Undercover's high quality, light weight, and reasonable price impressed law enforcement professionals and gun enthusiasts alike. It became the basis of Charter's success and the platform upon which a comprehensive line of affordable, reliable firearms was built.

This success has continued to the present day as the Ecker family of professional craftsmen has maintained its high quality standards, its unmatched customer service, and its pride in the gun making industry.

SELF-RELIANCE: an American Tradition

From the Mayflower to Valley Forge, from the Gold Rush to the Industrial Revolution, the American spirit of self-reliance has been a driving force. In today's settled, interconnected, comfortable world, we sometimes forget that.

Charter asks you to take stock of your achievements—your home, your possessions and, especially, your family. Ask yourself—who is ultimately responsible for your family's care, their comfort, and their protection?

You know the answer. That's why Charter urges you to get the proper training and the proper tools. We proudly offer a complete line of safe, reliable, affordable firearms to suit your protection needs.

Personal Protection—it's your Responsibility.
