Paul Howe on the CSAT Combat Sight

"I have been shooting the AR/M-4 platform for over 25 years. My goal in developing the CSAT Combat Sight was to develop a simple system that would allow the shooter to engage targets from 0-300 yards without taking their hands off the weapon to flip sights.

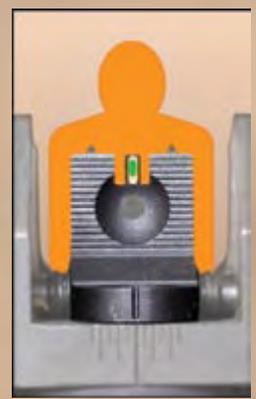

The CSAT sight accommodates the shooter in CQB situations and long-range engagements without taking your head or hands off the weapon. At close range, the sight takes the thinking and calculation out of the equation and allows the shooter to fire point of aim and to surgically engage targets with ease.

Further, it is a snap to zero, and train shooters. You start at seven yards and shoot it like a pistol sight to get a baseline zero and then confirm it at 100. It will cut your zero time in half. I believe in 'Simple is best'."

Zeroing Procedure

At 7 yards, fire a round group at the target with the sights aligned similar to that of a shooting a pistol.

Adjust the sights so that the rounds impact where your front sight is holding on the target.

Once zeroed at 7 yards, move back to 100 and fire 3 rounds at your target using the 6 o'clock or center hold sight alignment using the PEEP sight. Adjust your sights accordingly to make sure your rounds hit where you want them to.

Once zeroed, move back to 7 yards and confirm your close in zero using the front sight and rear notch. You should have a point of aim, point of impact zero.

To see how far you can use your notch and still make a hit, move back to 10 yards, 15 yards, etc. and notice the offset that begins to take place. Use the peep sight when you feel you are too far away for the notch to make a surgical shot. This will be up to the individual shooter to make this determination.

An Uncomplicated Solution

"When the time comes to save your life or that of another, you can bank on the fact that the light conditions will be poor, your threat will be moving, you will be moving, and time will not be on your side.

That, my friends, is a complicated problem.

The XS 24/7 Big Dot Tritium sight is an uncomplicated solution.

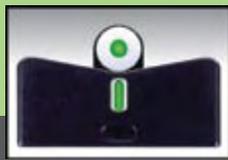

As a parting shot, always keep in mind that a victorious mindset and diligent training are the primary features in your survival plan. These assets must then be backed up with top-notch hardware.

XS Sights are a part of that hardware."

former US Marine, Police Officer, Small Arms and Tactics Instructor.

“No other sight is as compatible with the human response to threat.”

“I don’t teach people to ‘survive’ gunfights. In my classes students are taught to WIN through superior mindset, tactics, skill, and gear. One piece of gear I always recommend to any potential gunfighter is the XS 24/7 Big Dot. The XS 24/7 Big Dot is robust, reliable and is purposely-built to be used when the chips are down.

No other sight is as compatible with the human response to threat as the XS 24/7 Big Dot. Their simplicity is something that you can stake your life on while dealing with an adrenaline rush during a confrontation. Gunfights are a game of millimeters and milliseconds and XS Sights give you the time you need.”

Shooting XS Ghost-Ring Sights

- The shooter's eye will naturally center the top of the Front Post in the XS Ghost-Ring.
- To accomplish this, the Shooter must visually focus on the front sight.
- When the shooter focuses on the front sight the XS Ghost-Ring will become a FUZZY ghost-like image.
- Even though the XS Ghost-Ring is fuzzy, the shooter's eye still centers the front sight in the Ghost-Ring.

The Bullet's Point intended Point of Impact may be either the center of the dot or the top of the dot. In both examples the front sight aiming point is centered in the Ghost-Ring.
